Falling in Hate

You are gone, you left me alone
And I am frozen to the bone
My life has become a picture without colours, without a frame You said let's break up for a while to find ourselves in a better way.

But I don't trust you any more,
can't keep on loving you no more
and don't have scruples any more.

Growing hate will be my new fate
and even our common child cannot make this hard feeling mild.

I thought that there were some feelings left, feelings of love and of some hope.
But then I see you are wearing black stockings and wild miniskirts in the cold, chilly winter-time, to tease and please some other guy.

And I don't trust you any more,
can't keep on loving you no more
and don't have scruples any more.

Growing hate will be my new fate
and even our common child
cannot make this hard feeling mild.

Sometimes I ring you late at night,
But you are never at your home.
I ring you early in the morning, but you never answer the phone.
Where are you spending all those nights away from home? Surely not alone.

So I don't trust you any more,
can't keep on loving you no more
and don't have scruples any more.

Growing hate will be my new fate
and even our common child
cannot make this hard feeling mild.

You don’t want to be touched by me, but wish to meet me twice a week.
Want to know what I think of you, but give a damn about what I say.
You make a secret of your life, but you want to know all of mine.

So I don’t trust you any more,
can’t keep on loving you no more
and don’t have scruples any more.

Growing hate will be my new fate
and even our common child
cannot make this hard feeling mild.

You removed our ring from your finger, banished my pictures from your life.
Still you’re full of hope that one day we will be two lovers again.
Your heart is a big mystery,
A wall that shatters all my hopes.

So I don’t trust you any more,
can’t keep on loving you no more
and don’t have scruples any more.

Growing hate will be my new fate
and even our common child
cannot make this hard feeling mild.
