Sara, Bridge of Love

I.

Since you were five, so small and so wise,
You have woven, with love and courage,
A light bridge where our lost hearts
Found again the path of dew.

II.

Between the laughter, the tears, the silences,
You were the gentleness that gathers and balances,
A hyphen between our bursts,
A refuge open to all our debates.

CHORUS

Today, I thank life
For having given you to me, infinite source,
For being this bridge, this link, this fire,
For being my child, my sky, my wish.

III.

Thirty-five springs have passed, my beauty,
And each year, stronger, more faithful,
You carry within you that rare light
Which consoles, soothes, and never separates.

IV.

Your heart is a land without barriers,
Where one snuggles when the night is stone,
Where afflicted and wounded souls
Find a home, a hand extended.

CHORUS

Today, I thank life
For having given you to me, infinite source,
For being this bridge, this link, this fire,
For being my child, my sky, my wish.

V.

You have even offered, with a sunlit voice,
Your bridge to exiles, to lives in dust,
Showing them that a heart can be a land,
A country without walls, without borders.

VI.

May your path remain a river,
Where love flows and never dries up,
Because the world needs your arms,
This golden bridge that never falls.

CHORUS

Today, I thank life
For having given you to me, infinite source,
For being this bridge, this link, this fire,
For being my child, my sky, my wish.

CODA

So today, my daughter, my joy,
I thank you for every time
Your love took my hand
And taught me to believe in tomorrow again.
